Teaching Today – It's about pedagogy not just technology.

The world continues to change at a pace never before seen and the economy that schools were created to serve no longer exists yet for all the talk of an Education Revolution, most of the action centres around standardisation, assessment and accountability.

To compound this, recent studies suggest more kids are disengaged than ever from the educational process, and with changes to funding and structures for partnership brokers, the Newstart allowance and university fees, we're at risk of seeing this trend increase further.

Perhaps the talk of a revolution is a problem in itself? What if, instead we spoke of a renaissance in education? Technology is important, of course, but many take this to mean that teachers are slowly becoming obsolete. On the contrary, Dan asserts that great teaching and teachers have never been more vital than they are today.

Citing real---life examples from his work in schools, Dan will explore how teachers can teach to ensure that not only are kids prepared for tomorrow but are engaged today.

Dan will also provide a link to online resources to complement his keynote.
